The LJ annual architectural issue presents facts and figures about 187 public and 28 academic libraries completed between July 1, 1985 and June 30, 1986

Library Buildings –1986

By Bette-Lee Fox with Ann Burns & Frances G. Duckett

THE TOPSY-TURVY aspect of library construction continues for the third year with additions and renovations outpacing new construction by almost two to one. Yet the total project costs for the 118 additions and renovations ($59,206,517) is only 65 percent of the total project costs for the 69 new buildings ($90,951,900). And the total costs for both categories ($150,158,417) is the third highest in the last ten years.

Our "Projects in Progress" feature, which debuted in 1985, has netted us major results: 61 completed projects (that appear in the academic and public library tables with an asterisk) and 472 projects underway this year (p. 60), an increase of 19.5 percent over 1985. It makes one wonder why we didn't think of it sooner. For a source of information on what's happening in library construction, we have struck gold.

Large individual projects of note: the Tufts University Health Sciences Library (part of a $21 million building), the University of Iowa Law Library, Ames ($15,107,470) and the University of Alaska, Fairbanks ($13,200,000). Public projects include the new Central Library of the Irving Public Library, Texas and the George Memorial Library in Richmond, Texas (both over $8,000,000), the Naperville Public Library, Illinois ($6,243,333), and the Atlantic City Free Public Library, New Jersey ($4,732,280), and the addition and renovation project at the Enoch Pratt Free Library in Baltimore ($3,750,000).

The funding from local governments still supports the bulk of the projects, this year to the tune of $110,207,217. Federal funds are half of gift funds. And state funds actually increased to the third highest in the last six years (the 1982 figure is misleading because two state agency projects alone accounted for almost $20,000,000).

LJ looks forward to reporting the year's activity in library construction. Thanks to all who participated in 1986 and all those who will participate in the future.

Library Projects in Progress

The 1985 inaugural feature of "Library Projects in Progress" afforded us a wealth of information on those many library construction projects underway but, until 1985, unnoticed by our annual feature. We listed 395 public and academic projects last year, 61 of which are listed in the statistical tables of completed buildings this year (flagged with an asterisk). We have hit a gusher. The 1986 "Projects in Progress" lists 471 projects in various stages of construction. The list of individual projects submitted follows with the stage(s) of progress checked accordingly. The year following the library name represents the estimated year of completion. Below are some specific numbers about square foot estimates of the projects and projected construction costs. The figures would indicate that for most areas, library construction is still thriving.
